Rationale

Teaching Harper Lee's To Kill a Mockingbird has become something of a rite of passage for most English teachers. Since the novel's first publication in 1960, it has become one of the most popular canonized texts in the American classroom. The story is centered on the childhood memories of Scout, a young girl in rural Alabama, and the bittersweet experience of growing up, but the book has developed a more prominent role as the token literary depiction of an unjust society. As is often true of canonized texts, To Kill a Mockingbird has been preserved as a vestige of an imperfect, romanticized past, and teachers often limit their students' potential for learning by failing to break the novel from its datedness without removing the historical context.

While I want my students to recognize themes of racial injustice and prejudice in the book's setting, I don't want students to mistakenly think the book's age negates the relevance of the themes it displays in today's world. Literature without historical context may give the illusion that the story's fictional events are without basis, without truth. This unit will use a variety of supplemental texts to enforce the reality of Lee's novel. On its own, the novel is a beautiful and devastating reminder of mankind's atrocities and the bittersweet loss of a child's innocence. However, when fixed among modern texts, the book's acute ability to create nostalgia and stir social awareness is realized in the classroom. To bring the novel into modern relevance, this unit will employ supplemental texts such as Tate Taylor's 2011 film, The Help, Adrian Louis' "Among the Dog Eaters," and Brendan Kiely's and Jason Reynolds' All American Boys.

These complementary texts, along with FDR's inaugural address, Langston Hughes' "I, Too," and clips from the 2007 remake of Hairspray, help fill in the gaps between Scout's memories of the 1930s and the social and political turmoil of our own times. Because the book was written over 50 years ago, and is set in a time more distant than that, students may struggle with bringing the language, characters, and events into reality. Studying the more recent texts I have included, along with researching recent corresponding protest demonstrations, will help students understand that the difficulties Lee's characters faced are not as outdated as they may seem. Students should understand that Lee's novel was a literary outcry against an unjust system and a voice of truth in a turbulent time. The controversy surrounding the novel when it was first published is still surprisingly present today. Within the context of the Black Lives Matter movement and other social movements, the novel carries a heavy weight of historic value and modern relevance. Teachers are often hesitant to talk about incendiary topics like social protests. They believe that by bringing that discussion into their classroom, they may incite disagreement and resentment between students. What they often don't realize is that the discussion is already in their classroom. The English classroom does not exist in a separate world. Social and personal issues do not stop at the door. Teachers should embrace diversity and varying opinions in an open, respectful discussion. In engaging with controversial topics in a classroom setting, students learn to respect the opinions of others and respond courteously, even if they disagree. This unit focuses heavily on discussion, allowing students to develop interpersonal skills and diplomacy they will utilize throughout any future careers.

In addition to making students socially aware, this unit and its texts should push students to consider themselves as well as the characters they are studying. Through personal reflection in individual journals, students will explore not only the literary elements of each text, but also their own intimate response to the details of the texts. When studying social injustice and judgment, students should have a safe space to express their feelings and ideas. The response journal provides that space and helps students format their opinions into more formal pieces of writing. Through this journal, and the texts we study, students should question their own role in our society. What do they believe? Have they passed judgment on others? These questions should occur naturally through open discussion and writing prompts addressing the major themes across texts. Although each of these texts has social and literary value, I don't want students to simply analyze the fictional aspects of each text. Above all, the purpose of this unit is to push students to grow academically and personally, and to allow them to leave the classroom in some way better than they entered.

Goals and Objectives

Goal 1: Free Response Journal

This unit explores themes in literature and real world events that can often be uncomfortable to talk about. Students should have a safe place in the classroom to express their inner thoughts and opinions on each text they read. To accomplish this, students will keep a personal journal. Students will be required to address daily prompts and write using correct mechanics. Students will practice their writing skills while responding honestly to resonant texts. Students will be aware that I will read their journal entries, but may request for an entry to be left unread. Journal entries will be graded on completion and effort. Students should always write only their own opinions and should feel comfortable expressing thoughts in a private space.

Goal 2: Group Research Project

Many texts in this unit explore social injustice and the protests staged by the oppressed. In order to fully appreciate the relevance of each text in today's classroom, students should have a rudimentary knowledge of current events and the who, what, when, where, why, and how of protest demonstrations. Students will participate in an inclass group research project to inform themselves on different forms of protest and an example of one real world protest demonstration. In groups of four or five, students will research one historical or current protest, using credible sources to back their discoveries. Students will then synthesize this information into visually appealing poster. All students must participate in the presentation of the poster. Students will report their findings to the class and reflect on how their chosen protest connects to the texts.

Goal 3: Intellectual Discussion

In this unit, students will learn to express their thoughts and understanding of major texts through intellectual discussion. Students will develop interpersonal skills by respectfully building upon or rebutting the contributions of others. Students will learn to reference textual evidence and use quotes from the text to support their ideas. Students will facilitate discussion, develop and ask thought-provoking discussion questions, and use their own knowledge of the text to quickly construct original and insightful answers to the questions of other students or the teacher. Students will be graded based on participation and how well their responses showcase their knowledge of the text. A rubric for discussion seminars can be found in Appendix E.

Goal 4: Creative Final Project

After students have completed To Kill a Mockingbird, they will be asked to reflect on the major themes, motifs, symbols, characters, and events within the novel. Students will design and construct a creative final project to showcase their understanding and analysis of the novel. The project consists of one creative component—for example, scrapbook, rap, book of poems, or other form chosen by the student—and a one-page written component describing the process of creating the project and how the project connects to the text. This project will also require students to make comparisons between the novel and one other text they have read in this unit. Students will write a one-page proposal describing what form their project will take and giving an outline of what themes, characters, and/or events the project might analyze. Students must meet with me individually during class to discuss their proposal and make revisions if necessary. A more detailed account of project instructions can be found in Appendix A.

Grade Distribution for the Unit

Description of Class Projects and Assignments	Points
Class Participation/Daily Journals: Individual. Students	400 will receive full participation points for each class period in which they are on time, prepared, and participate in a valuable way. Students will also be expected to complete daily writing responses in a personal notebook/journal.
These journals will be collected at the end of the unit and graded for completion and effort. Students must complete each journal prompt to receive full points.
Discussion Participation : For each major text we read,	200 students will participate in at least one whole class discussion seminar to analyze sections of the text. Students will receive points based on the number of responses they provide. Students who do not wish to speak in class must provide a one-page version of their own analysis. Students are also required to compose two discussion questions for each seminar. Questions are collected after class and graded for completion.
Timed Writings: Students will complete at least one timed	50 writing per unit. Students will be required to address a prompt based on the main text. Students must completely address the prompt and provide original and insightful analysis to receive full points.
Group Research Project: Students will participate in a	100
two-day in-class group project researching a protest demonstration of their group's choice. This project consists of researching credible sources, synthesizing information, composing a visually appealing poster displaying the most important information, providing APA citations for sources, and presenting the poster to the class.
Artistic Endeavors: Students will complete 3 small	50 creative projects. Students will cast the movie version of the	30 main text in small groups, map the town of Maycomb using textual evidence, and write and perform a script based on Boo Radley's life in small groups. Instructions for these artistic components can be found in the Appendix.
Creative Final Project: Students will compose a creative	200
final project displaying their understanding and analysis of	200
the main text according to the instructions provided in the Appendix.
Total Points:	1000
TOTAL FOIRTS.	1000

Lesson title	Defining Civil Disobedience
Lesson	Students have just finished All American Boys and more recently,
Purpose/Rationale	The Help. Students have discussed the movie in depth, and now will be moving into a new unit featuring themes of justice and judgment. In this lesson, students will use multiple texts, denotation, and their own experience and opinions to help them define civil disobedience—a form of protest featured prominently in the unit's texts and our country's history. I want students to have a clear mental picture of historical events and the types of conflicts and historical events that were taking place while the unit's texts were being written. Students will be given examples of protests from popular culture and can then determine their own definition of civil disobedience. Students who did not talk in the previous -	day's seminar will have a chance to provide their thoughts.

Week 2

Monday

Civil Disobedience in the Real World Students have now viewed several fictionalized representations of protest demonstrations. Students should now be able to identify similarities between texts. This lesson first gives students examples of civil disobedience in a real world setting. Students will learn that prejudice and injustice are not things of the past (most of their texts have been set in the fifties and sixties), and protest demonstrations are still occurring daily. Students will inform themselves on current topics and be able to make more personal connections to future texts.
Students will watch two examples of real world protest demonstrations. Students consider events of videos to briefly answer essential questions. Students will be divided into groups of four or five. Each group will be assigned a computer or an iPad.
Computer lab may need to be reserved in advance. Students will study one protest demonstration (historical or recent) in depth, researching the who, what, where, when, why, and how of the demonstration and connecting that event to fictional representations. Students will make one poster per group, addressing the essential questions. To be continued in following day's lesson.

	powerful weapon against social injustice, and students should familiarize themselves with different mediums and authors. Texts so far in this unit have focused on the prejudice and injustice aimed at African Americans. However, hopefully at least one group will choose to research the protest demonstrations at Standing Rock Reservation. Students should know that judgment occurs within and

Daily Lesson Information

Lesson title	Mockingbird Reading Day 1
Lesson	Students will have a brief introduction to the novel. Since this text
Purpose/Rationale	is the first full length novel students will read in this unit, I want to give them a day to read in class. Reading in class allows students to accustom themselves to the novel's style and language in a space where a teacher can help them through unfamiliar terms or events. It is likely that some students will not read on their own due to inadequate reading time at home, difficulty reading, or simple refusal to complete the assignment. This reading day allows students to read ahead in the novel. Students who struggle with reading are placed in an environment where assistance is readily available, and all students can practice their reading fluency and skills in a quiet, relaxed classroom with minimum distractions.

Today's Essential Question(s) and/or Anticipatory Set

What essential question(s) guide(s) this lesson plan and/or unit? What anticipatory set are you presenting to engage the students?

Timed Write: Scout explores the wonder, nostalgia, and mischief she remembers from her childhood, especially summers, in rural Alabama. Does her youth prevent her from seeing the whole picture? What do we see that she does not understand? What comparisons can you make between Scout's story and your own experiences as a child? Reflect on one summer during your lifetime, giving a thorough summary of significant events and people.

Daily Lesson Information

Lesson title	Vocab Trash-ketball
Lesson	Because Harper Lee's novel was written in 1960, the diction is Purpose/Rationale	sometimes outdated or unfamiliar to students. This lesson requires students to identify unfamiliar vocabulary and define two words independently. Students each contribute to the list of words and each student is provided with a worksheet to study.
	This lesson quizzes students on vocabulary and allows them to work interactively with each other. Students are encouraged to work together, make connections to text, and move around the classroom. Students participate in a fun, memorable activity, which activates knowledge and recall.
Lesson description	Earlier in the week, each student will have identified two words

(include concepts and skills and where this lesson fits within the curriculum)	in their reading they were unfamiliar with, defined those two words, and brought the definitions to be put onto a study list by the teacher. Students will briefly study their definition worksheets. Students will be divided into two groups by teacher according to ability (teacher may also decide to simply divide room in half). Students will be called on individually to spell and define a word from the list. If the student answers both correctly, the student may "shoot" the ball (made from paper and tape) from the scoring line (tape on the floor) into the basket (trash basket) for two points. A correct spelling or definition and a made basket equals one point. If the student does not know either, the other team has a chance to steal. The teacher will keep score. Students will use this activity to study vocabulary. Students may not use their vocab sheet during game, but they may use their copy of the book if they wish. Winning team will receive bonus points on a timed writing or other quiz grade.

Lesson title	Mapping Maycomb
Lesson	Students have analyzed and discussed characters and events of Purpose/Rationale	importance. It is important for students to orient themselves
_	within the setting and place of the novel. Scout's neighborhood and the people within it are of vital importance to her story.
	Students should be able to map places of significance within the novel and identify why they are important to the story. Visual learners will benefit from this activity because they will be able to refer to the map while reading the remainder of the novel.
	Students will also practice citing quotes from the novel.

Daily Lesson Information

Lesson title	Graffiti Write—All American Boys and To Kill a Mockingbird
Lesson	This lesson allows students to express their opinions semi-
Purpose/Rationale	privately. With controversial and current topics like the Black Lives Matter movement and racially-charged historical events depicted in Lee's novel, differing and strong attitudes are sure to arise. Students should feel comfortable expressing thoughts about

- How does the use of multiple points of view affect the work? How does one point of view change the work?
- How is Rashad judged? Who judges him and why? (Not just Paul). Can we compare this to the way Tom Robinson is judged?
- Are Rashad's and Scout's feelings toward their fathers by age or other factors? Why do they see their fathers the way they do? Do they judge them?
- Do the settings/places of the texts differ greatly from one another? How do they distinguish each text/affect the characters' experiences
- Talk about the community surrounding the main characters in each novel. How do they differ? Do their differences occur solely because of time period? Do they support and/or judge the main character?

Daily Lesson Information

Lesson title	Project Work Day 2
Lesson Purpose/Rationale	Students have now completed To Kill a Mockingbird and other accompanying texts. Students have collaboratively facilitated discussion, formed connections between texts, analyzed texts in writing, and completed group research projects. Students will now complete individual creative projects. This project allows students to think critically about themes, characters, and events across multiple texts. Students are able to express themselves creatively in a safe, respectful environment. This project provides a memorable experience in which students will establish their personal experience through the unit.
Lesson description (include concepts and skills and where this lesson fits within the curriculum)	Students will compose a creative project that encompasses their personal understanding and analysis of the characters, themes, events, etc. in the novel and one other text. #### Appendix A

Final Project Instructions and Rubric

For this unit, you will be required to complete a creative final project detailing your understanding of major themes, motifs, characters, events, and symbols used in the novel and one other work we have analyzed. Use this project to reflect on your personal experience with the text and explore your creative strengths.

Successful projects should:

- Include a one-page proposal detailing what the project will consist of (form) and a tentative summary of themes, characters, and/or events incorporated.
- Be neat and visually interesting.
- Show evidence of planning and genuine effort.
- Include a written component (2 page minimum, double-spaced, APA formatting and citation) explaining the project's relation to the text and your thought process in making it.
- Clearly embody your understanding of themes, characters, and/or events across at least two texts through written and visual means.
- Include only original work. No plagiarism!

Projects may take the form of:

- Shadow box
- Scrapbook
- Board Game
- Performance Art (Costumed Role-play, Rap, Song, etc.)
- Other

Remember, these are just suggestions. You are welcome to pitch an original idea to me in your proposal! I will review and revise proposals with you individually in class. You will have two days to work on these projects in class during the week they are due, but successful projects will not start during those two days.

Creative Component	Exhibits thoughtful design and careful attention to detail and form	Exhibits some attention to design, detail, and form	Exhibits little to no attention to design, detail, and form	/50 points
Written Component	Provides answers to any ambiguous decisions made in the project and offers a clear explanation for the overall project	Provides some answers to any ambiguous decisions made in the project and offers a vague explanation for the overall project	Does not provide answers to any ambiguous decisions made in the project and offers no explanation for the project	/50 points

Appendix B

Mapping Maycomb

The collective adventures of Scout, Jem, and Dill occur mostly within their small neighborhood. Today, you will create a map of Maycomb, using your text to determine where each place of significance lies. There are many places to choose from, but try to pick places with specific importance to the children or places that are described clearly in the text.

Your map should:

- Include at least 10 places.
- Be neat and visually interesting (use colored pencils).
- Be backed up by textual evidence. Please write supporting quotes and a page number for each on the back of your map. If you can't find a quote that determines geographical place, at least include a quote mentioning the place.

Appendix C

Boo Productions

In groups of four or five, you will write a short skit detailing a day in the life of Boo Radley. Use your text to find details about Boo.

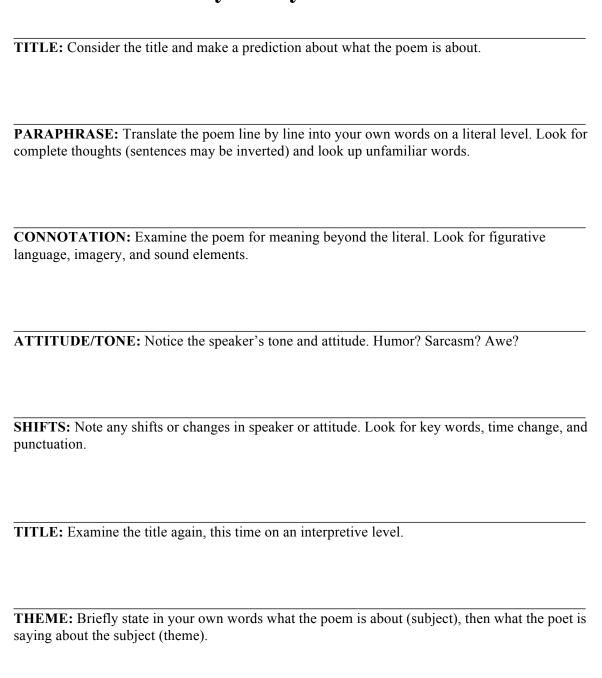

What facts do we know about Boo? What do the children think of Boo? How does the town view him? What do you think he is actually like?

Within your group, assign characters and practice your lines. You will perform your skit for the class. I will grade your performance based on participation, so make sure everyone has a part, even if it's just setting the scene or reading stage directions. Don't be afraid to make predictions and embellish creatively on what little we know about Boo!

Make sure you are able to point to textual evidence if I ask you about the events of your script. Be able to tell me why.
